Topic: Choosing a college or university

Description story of my flowchart

To make a good choice for university, I need to take a long steps. The first thing I should do is set my goal. What do I want to become in the future? I try to plan this carefully because it's a crucial step for everything that comes next. For me, I started this process in high school. I did a lot of research back then.

The next step is to browse related majors based on my goals. I don't choose the university first because I prefer to study something I enjoy at an average university rather than studying something I don't like it at the best university. Since I am interested in IT, programming, computer software, I found a few majors that suit for me. Those are Informatics (Teknik Informatika), Information System (Sistem Informasi), and Computer Engineering (Teknik Komputer). Those majors are usually in the same faculty at most university, typically found in either the Computer Science or Engineering faculty.

After I finding the right major, I needed to consult with my family. I talk with my parents and my brother about my choice, and they agreed. So, I continued to look for the right university for me.

I spent a long time researching to find the right university. Universitas Brawijaya (UB) is one of the universities I want to attend. Since it's quite competitive to get into UB, I prepared an alternative option. I did more research and finally found one: Politeknik negeri Malang (POLINEMA). It's different from UB because its main focus is on vocational studies, while UB offers both academic and vocational programs. My hope if I can get into POLINEMA, I can learn a lot about programming and another hardskill. As IT worker, I think hardskill in programming and other stuffs is really important.

I didn't forget to consult with my family. I talked to them about my choice to study there, and they all agreed with my decision. I'm happy, and now I just need to focus on preparing for the entrance exam.
